

Kyle Sellett

Weiss-Kunz & Oliver, LLC

Kyle D. Sellett is a Partner of Weiss-Kunz & Oliver, LLC, and brings to the firm his experience in a wide variety of matters including divorce, parentage, asset division, adoption, premarital agreements, modification of parental responsibilities (custody), maintenance and child support modification among others. Kyle routinely handles cases in Cook, DuPage and Will County; however, his skill sets are transferable to all jurisdictions. Kyle earned his degree from The John Marshall Law School in 2015 and has been practicing family law since 2018. By 2020 he was named a Partner at his previous law firm due to his relentless dedication to his clients and co-workers alike. What drew him to the area of family law is his desire and dedication to helping individuals. He understands that the process of a divorce or parentage case can be stressful and mentally exhausting, and he takes each file as an opportunity to help a client open up a new chapter of their lives for themselves and their family members. Kyle is able to effectively communicate with clients to determine not only their goals during litigation, but also help them to discover what they need to continue on after its completion. He understands that the relationship with his clients is a partnership and is committed to nurturing that relationship throughout the entire life of their file. He believes that settlement should always be an avenue that is explored. However, he understands that it may not always be a possibility and is well equipped with the skills necessary to take a case from the filing of the initial Petition to trial when necessary.
